Fat Man's Club Holds Reunion At Horse Show

Alfred B. Macley Is Host to Members; Weight Limit Is 275 Lbs. or Over, but a Few Others Get In

Judge Praises Entries

William McGibbon Says He Sees a Steady Improvement as Each Year Passes

By Harriette Underhill

Alfred B. Macley gave a luncheon up at the Squadron A Armory yesterday, where the thirty-seventh annual Horse Show is in progress. Mr. Macley is the president of the club, as well as the president of the Horse Show, but the rules for members of the club are stringent. Not every one may be admitted and you cannot even be born into it either, for it is called "Fat Man's Club," and the first rule is that applicants for membership must weigh at least 275 pounds, and there is no "weight-for-age" clause. Two of the members got around this, however, by matriculating jointly. They are John McE. Bowman, fondly called Jack by all his friends, and "Bob" Fairbairn. Both hope in time to attain the portly proportions which will entitle them to hold full membership papers. Some one suggested that the name of the club be changed to "The Anemic Club," but this was promptly voted down.

Guy Ward, it seems, is the portliest of all the members, because Charles Cox, of Philadelphia, has dwindled away to only 260 pounds since the entry lists closed.

Reginald Vanderbilt, who the previous day gave the hackney luncheon, and who is a member in very good standing, sat at Mr. Macley's right hand, and, of course, R. Lawrence Smith, the popular and jolly vice-president, was prominent in the gathering. Others present were James Fox, Professor Muldoon, Pierre Lorillard Jr., who has not the required avoirdupois, but is gladly welcomed as a member because no gathering is complete without him; John E. Madden, and David Matlack, of Kentucky.

"Marge" Is Discovered

For years Bert Savory has been discussing "Marge" with Jay Brennan, but he believes that he is the first person who ever has seen her.

She attended the Horse Show yesterday, and we met her near the ninety-fourth Street entrance with her friend "El." Of course, we couldn't speak to Marge, or she would have become self-conscious, but we could listen, and we did.

Marge and El must have been skinny-legged, cheery, pig-tailed kids, jumping rope somewhere east of Lexington Avenue. The two were very nervous over the plunge into society which they contemplated taking when we spotted them. "Listen, Marge, if they tickets ain't good ain't we got bounced if I'll die."

"Say, what's eatin' you?" He's a groom, ain't he, and he wouldn't give you no good tickets. Can't you trust him?" So in they walked with their eyes riveted on Eddie Nolan, the big detective. Once inside Marge forgot her uneasiness in her admiration. "My Gawd, ain't it beautiful! Real horses and real sky! Lookit!"

"Shut up," retorted El, "and act elegant! Look at the monkey up on the horse! He can't ride, I'll say, couldn't I could live here. Lookit the diamonds in the box. Some stones! Whatta thet gump in the red shirt!"

"Shut up, my dear, shut up; tlem's the judges ain't they'll hear you."

"Let's get nearer the rail. Wisht I had one of the horses—the henna one over there I like."

"Say, I wouldn't look like that dame on a bet. Think I'd go out in a pair of pants like her. Not on your life! Afraid the cops would get me."

"Jimmie said if we came we could sure see Mr. Vanderbilt, and I want to see Mr. Vanderbilt. I'd rather see millionaires any day than hennas, in which Marge and El do not differ greatly from the majority of people who attend the horse show."

Judges Have Full Day

William McGibbon, who ought to, and probably does, know as much about the horses as any man that ever played the game, had a full morning. He judged seven classes of youngsters who aspire to being saddle horses or hunters, and when he had finished he gave a long sigh and remarked, "That is the finest bunch that ever has paraded before me in a national show. There is a steady and a notable improvement in the yearlings as the seasons go by, and it certainly looks encouraging to a horseman."

We noticed that Mr. McGibbon leaned to the thoroughbred type, demanding good riding shoulders in youngsters.

The club house verandah is merely an extension of the press box, or vice versa, so that all one has to do to learn all the gossip is keep one's ears open. There was a heated discussion among the breeders and horsemen—wise men of the East, they seemed to us. Nearly all of them expressed dissatisfaction with the present system of judging the saddle horses, but Mrs. Thomas Kegan seemed to be the only one with a suggestion. Her idea is to get six competent judges and to divide them into three groups. The first class of saddle horses will parade before the judges, the next class before the second couple and so on. This will mean that each horse will have a chance to be passed upon by different men and have the advantage of individual tastes. All of the horsemen think the idea is great and are going to try to put it over for next year.

O. W. Lehmann's Exciter has won everything so far, and he is an excellent horse, but so is Jay Madden's Myopia, which has gone unplaced. Myopia was one of those which got the gate in the class for ladies' saddle horses yesterday, and one old horse—"Red"—don't quote us on that—but then he went on to say that in the dozen or more horses competing in this class there were only two which really were "ladies' horses." They were the winner, Exciter, and Myopia, which has not been placed at this show, but which earlier in the season defeated Winona, Clara Peck's mare, which won the red ribbon yesterday.

"If judges do not ride," continued the old horseman, "they pick out a horse for his conformation, when they should consider his ease in traveling."

William McGibbon admits that in 1888, when the Horse Show was very young, he rode Filmaker over the hurdle which established a world's record. His jump was 7 feet 4 1/4 inches on the tankard at the old Garden.

The big class of the evening was the $2,000 stake which brought out fourteen of the leading saddle horses of the show. The contest resulted in a close competition between Mortimer B. Fuller, Amber Crest and John P. Crozer's Bohemian Actress. The spectators were impressed by the early character and form displayed by Mr. Fuller's seven-year-old chestnut gelding, but Mr. Crozer's nine-year-old gelding, the Bohemian Actress, was awarded the blue. Mr. H. H. Hess, who rode Bohemian Actress after getting the horse in perfect form, kept her steady to a brilliant performance which completely overhauled Amber Crest's early form. The winner was awarded $800 of the purse and Amber Crest was awarded the second prize of $400.

The remaining $800 was split between the owners of Flying Eagle and Sporty McGee, who finished third and fourth. The opening class of the evening was for hunters and jumpers over four five-foot jumps. Michael J. Devaney won by a wide margin, beating General Pershing's Jeff. Miss Betty Miller's Silver Crest, who defeated these horses at the earlier shows this year, was still unable to obtain a blue ribbon and Silver as Mr. Fred Weitzel's Eagle and Sporty McGee, who finished third and fourth.

The awards follow:

Mountbattens Among Society Throngs at the Horse Show

British Couple Almost Unnoticed as They Mingle With Crowds in the Ring; General Pershing Is Expected to Attend With Friends To-morrow

One of the largest crowds of the show attended the judging of the events yesterday at the Horse Show at Squadron A Armory. During the afternoon many of the arena boxes were occupied by members of society and at the evening session nearly every box was filled with prominent patrons.

Lord and Lady Mountbatten slipped into the show unnoticed about 8 o'clock and walked about the ring without many people knowing they had visited the show. They stayed only a short while. Brigadier General F. W. Sladen, who has replaced Brigadier General MacArthur as commandant at West Point, sat in box 33 with Major General Halbrook, who is chief of cavalry and ranks next to General Pershing. It was announced last night that General Pershing and a party of friends would be guests at the show on Saturday night.

The military visitors collected in the box beneath the members' box on the porch of Mount Vernon. The members' box was filled with prominent horsemen who talked "horse" during the judging of the various classes. The tea room was patrolled by a throng of generous visitors again yesterday.
